The Battle of Bull Run

Confederate General B. T. Beauregard recounts the first major encounter between the untested Confederacy and the Federal troops. This eBook includes letters subsequently submitted to the editor addressing Beauregard's account; as well as others. Also includes troop strengths for both sides reported by the Adjutants-General.

Operations of the Western Flotilla and Recollections of Foote and the Gun-Boats.

Written by Commander Henry Walke, of the Union iron clad Carondelet, which along with the gun boats, commanded by Flag-Officer Foote, raised havoc with the Confederate river forces along the Kentucky and Tennessee rivers. Includes accounts of the capture of Fort Donelson.

Clash of the Iron Clads

This eBook combines three factual, eye-witness accounts from three different view points of the first encounters between the Monitor and Merrimac; John Taylor Wood, the Commander of the Merrimac and Samuel Dana Greene, the only executive officer the Monitor had and a Confederate officer watching from shore. On March 8, 1862, this naval battle between iron clads changed the navies of the world forever.

Opening the Lower Mississippi

David D. Porter, U.S.N. commander of the Powhatan, details his plan for the flotilla, commanded by Admiral Farragut, which executed the plan, led to the destruction of New Orleans and retaking control of the Lower Mississippi by Federal forces on up the river to Memphis.

The Shiloh Campaign

Ulysses S. Grant gives a detailed account of this critical battle. Until it was fought, he "believed that the rebellion would collapse suddenly and soon if a decisive victory could be gained over any of its armies." Includes Notes of a Confederate Staff-Officer at Shiloh by Thomas Jordan and Albert Sidney Johnston and the Shiloh Campaign by William Preston Johnston, his son.
